We are SO excited to find red tomatoes in the garden. My hands smell like tomatoes right now from picking them and I love it!!

They are not all totally ripe yet but I like to pick them a little early and let them sit on my counter for a day or two to ripen in the safety of my kitchen with no bugs, diseases, or predators.

The Cherry Tomatoes are DIVINE!! I picked about 20 last week and just ate them myself. ☺ There should be enough this week to give some to you all. I will try to get you each a pint.

The sweet corn is much easier to pick now....the Temptation is all ripened so we don't have to search for ripe ears anymore. But we do have to search for ears that have not been bitten into by a coon. Scott is putting more traps out tonight. I would not be so upset if they would eat the WHOLE EAR.

Recipes

Cucumber Onion Salad

1 large cucumber
1 medium onion
1 large tomato
zesty Italian dressing wine vinegar
salt and pepper to taste

Cut up cucumbers, onion, and tomato in small cubes. Salt and pepper as desired. Add 1 tbsp wine vinegar.
Add enough Italian dressing to cover (more or less to desired taste).

Great as a side dish for many meals.

I found this recipe that looked good but have not tried it yet. Was looking for ideas for tomatoes but I usually just slice and eat or put them on sandwiches and salads, etc.

What's going on at the farm.

We donated corn for the sweet corn feed at the fair yesterday. Scott and I picked it and then took it there and helped shuck the ears and get everything set up. We were both worried about this for a long time. It's scary making a commitment like that because you never know what is going to happen on the farm!! We were there for the feed and helped serve and everyone seemed to really enjoy the corn and wanted to know where they could get some so hopefully it will help our sales.

We are constantly cleaning up fields and mowing it seems. Drew was helping mow today and said he saw A LOT of frogs...at least 10 so it must be moist enough out there for them. Both the kids are good helpers but Jade likes to help inside.....she's not much of a tomboy like her mother! ☺
